
“I just got fed up with those other levelers.”

— Full-time RVer Bud Antuna

Bud and Pat Antuna knew better. They didn't insist on HWH when they bought their second RV. And that's when their problems began.

The veteran RVers were satisfied customers after installing an HWH hydraulic leveling system on their first RV.

Bud genuinely appreciated HWH's uncompromising design.

“I have a background in the electro-mechanical field, so I understand hydraulics. The HWH system is top quality, providing reliable performance while offering several safety-oriented features.”

Pat enjoyed the ease of operation.

“With the HWH levelers, you just push a button and it's done.”

And they both were grateful for HWH's field support and prompt service.

“I've called them up for some very technical assistance and they just walked me through it over the phone.”

But when Bud and Pat bought their next RV, they had another brand installed. That's when they understood the HWH difference.

“First off, the system we bought just wouldn't level. But the worst thing was you could literally see the frame twisting when it was leveling, which is dangerous. HWH levels in pairs, so that is no longer a problem.”

That wasn't their only concern.

“It was unbelievably loud. We wouldn't even set the levelers if we pulled in at night because of the noise.”

Bud and Pat did find a solution.

“I was so fed up, I just replaced the levelers with HWH.”

Don't make the same mistake as Bud and Pat when choosing a hydraulic leveling or room extension system. Insist on HWH.
